Excerpt: . . . what to avoid, and having discovered the rules by which to govern himself he must abide by them. Doctors, to whom dyspeptics go for treatment and advice, are fond of giving their patients written or printed lists of the things they may eat and not eat, the time for meals, etc. This rule of thumb may answer fairly well with a mass of people, but it is scarcely intelligent or scientific. These lists, and even the prescriptions, are handed on from one dyspeptic to another in the hope that the talisman may act without the payment of the standard fee. The results of this haphazard method of treating a most complicated malady would afford comic reading if they could be collected, and might doubtless form the bases for many miraculous cures. Asking once for something requiring immediate attention to be made up for me at a well-known chemists, I was informed that it could not possibly be done that day, as the Countess of was going away into the country, and had sent all her prescriptions to be made up--they being always carefully preserved by her for country dispensation to her poor neighbours and dependants. I cannot resist the temptation to tell the following story, illustrating the way in which dietetic rules for the treatment of indigestion are handed on and looked upon as infallible specifics. Four men, unknown to each other, once met. at the common table of a country inn. They all...
