It is, indeed, as Doctor Drews himself confesses, difficult to believe that Paul could at so early a stage give aversion of the Lord s Supper that differed so much from that of the primitive community; but this fact--if it be a fact----does not indicate that the community invented the memorial portion and then foisted it on to a supposed founder. Rather, it shows that the community had treasured up the various slightly differing traditional forms, which St. Paul doubtless learned from the apostles themselves when he met them in council at Antioch (Gal. 2:11) and afterwards combined when he wrote his letter to the Corinthian church. This view of the matter at least has all the facts, as we know them, wholly in its favour. 1 Or else the letter is not Pauline! The Acts and Words of Institution We will now turn from the fact of the institution of the Eucharist by Jesus to the acts and words by which it was instituted, and in so doing endeavour to approach this great subject in the spirit of, and with the eyes of, the man of the first century. And to do this we must first of all disembarass ourselves of all sacramental theories of a metaphysical nature, whether they be those of the Middle Ages or of the sixteenth century and later. In the view of the men assembled in the upper room in Jerusalem, and others of their age, a...
