Excerpt: .a long, thin, grave looking personage, mind that these cavaliers, pointing to Don Antonio s attendants, are well entertained. Then taking his relative by the hand, he led him into the mansion. Theodora, he then resumed, is as yet at her morning orisons, in the company of good Martha, but on an occasion like the present, there would be no great sin in smiling; it is not my maxim to disturb fair ladies when so laudably occupied. Well, my young friend, as you please; but, good heavens! continued he, surveying his guest from head to foot, with much complacency, how you are altered! It is a goodly and consoling sight to see the improvement a few years bestow on a young man. You have distinguished yourself at the games, said Don Manuel; this is a source of unspeakable joy to me, the more so, as it appears that the queen has been pleased to reward your merit. I have heard that you are entrusted with the command of a party of those gallant men, that are destined to chastise the rebellious Moors of the Alpujarras. In truth, modestly answered Don Antonio, our great queen has condescended to honor me far above my deserts; but I trust that my future conduct will make me worthy of the confidence she has reposed in me. I suppose, then, said Don Manuel, that your stay at Guadix will be but short P Very short; as I am only...
