Not illustrated. 1868 Excerpt: .of some perishable ornament to the wrists; thirty-seven beads, and several portions of rings. On two of the finger bones were found silver rings. There were also one bead on a ring, and a small gold ornament, with a garnet set in a filigree border. Over one skeleton, which was about three feet in the ground, was laid a great quantity of pieces of limestone, none of them bearing any marks of workmanship, nor did any show the action of fire. Close by, in a woman s grave, there were 120 beads, mostly small and of blue glass, but some were egg-shaped of glass, and a large lump of crystal for the centre bead, which was not round, but had only the angles worked off. But the relic which excited the greatest interest amongst the workmen, and has since excited the admiration of those to whom it has been exhibited, is a glass vessel of pale green colour, with a spiral thread-like pattern embossed. The top has an expanding lip which gives elegance to the outline, and the vessel gradually decreases in size from the diameter of three inches and a half at the mouth to barely three-quarters of an inch at the bottom, and there is no foot or stand. In general form it is like the slender ale glass used in the West of England, without a foot: if filled to the brim it would contain more than fourteen ounces of liquid. In two...
